The Food and Drug Law practice at Frommer Lawrence & Haug is headed by Charles Raubicheck, who has been a trial attorney at the FDA, Adjunct Professor of FDA Law at New York University School of Law (30 years), and in private practice representing FDA-regulated companies (33 years). Other partners in our Food and Drug Law group are Naomi Halpern and Brian Malkin.

Our firm is unique because we offer a combination of FDA and patent law services, particularly in the Hatch-Waxman area. We represent both brand and generic companies. Our concentrations include litigating Paragraph IV patent infringement cases, patent listing, Paragraph IV certifications and notice letters, 30-month stays, 180-day generic market exclusivity, and Section VIII statements of inapplicable use.

In addition, we specialize in drug product life cycle management counseling.

Our Food and Drug Law practice also concentrates on compliance with labeling and advertising requirements, and good manufacturing practice (GMP) standards, for foods, drugs, biologics, medical devices and dietary supplements. Our clients include manufacturers, distributors, marketers, practitioners and professional associations.
